Committee Overview

Interpol Overview

- Committee Summary : INTERPOL, the committee, moves beyond abstract policy to focus on the technical and operational dismantling of the sophisticated human trafficking networks permeating Western Europe. With Paris serving as a critical nexus for both the transit and exploitation of victims, delegates must address the city's role as a major hub within the Schengen Area where high-speed rail links and international airports facilitate the movement of criminal syndicates. The debate centers on enhancing real-time intelligence sharing through secure communication channels, utilizing specialized databases to track the financial footprints of "polycriminal" organizations, and synchronizing cross-border tactical operations to bypass the legal complexities of national jurisdictions. By prioritizing the "follow the money" approach and the deployment of INTERPOL's specialized notices, the committee aims to disrupt the supply chains of forced labor and sexual exploitation that capitalize on the high demand and anonymity of the Parisian urban landscape.

Opening Speech & Position Paper

Opening Speech

Honorable Chairs and Fellow Delegates, the delegate of France is aggravated by the lack of effective mechanisms to deter and eliminate trafficking in persons. Though Paris remains the center of this debate, the delegation of France must draw attention to the thousands of unaccompanied minors in Mayotte of whom have been failed by the judicial system and are at an extremely high risk of exploitation, France calls for all nations to aid in a minors protection program for all small nations and islands whose minors face disproportionate exploitation. Furthermore, the estimated 11,000 trafficking cases registered across France is yet another wake up call to act in a different manner to combat the revolting crime of human trafficking. The delegation of France firmly believes that sex work practices must be abolished and considered criminal for customers of the services. Moreover, the risk of labour exploitation will be combatted using digital algorithms reporting to the I-24/7 database, aiming to detect odd patterns in posts, coded language, and "too good to be true" advertisements. France also believes that the provision of a reflection period must be a worldwide standard and should also be extended. Shelter will be accounted for by national NGOs who can support victims of trafficking to gain legal status in the country or find a safe path to their home nation during the reflection period. Finally, in order to effectively and ethically address the state of trafficking in persons around the world, all nations must be assessed on vulnerability indexes and population demographics to identify regions of which must be tended to first. France proposes a 4 color system, red indicating high vulnerability, orange and yellow indicating mild vulnerability, and green indicating low vulnerability. France is eager to collaborate with all nations to dismantle entire trafficking networks. Thank you, this delegate yields the floor back to the chairs.

- Deportation is only in order when a victim requests it, refuses to cooperate with both local and international law enforcement after the 3 month recovery period (informing on trafficking routes and business can be done in exchange for citizenship and long-term survivor support – this is critical and must be done ASAP while methods are the same and traffickers are near – informing during the 3 month period must be done through a psychological professional to prevent further trauma or intimidation)

France:
Honourable Chairs, Esteemed Delegates, this resolution is quite frankly, revolutionary. Unlike many previously implemented solutions, resolution 1.1 aims to promote education for vulnerable populations while providing the necessary resources in the horrendous event of trafficking. Instead of focusing on one sector, this resolution aims to address all factors across networks to not only prevent trafficking but address it when it becomes an unfortunate reality. This resolution calls for categorization of countries and individuals to determine the risk level and needed monitoring for each given situation. Not only does this resolution provide means for victims to gain legal status but it also allows for nuance in circumstances by providing a mechanism for anonymous reporting by victims and the option for an immediately scheduled meeting with a social worker that aims to work behind the backs of traffickers to ensure the physical safety of victims is prioritized. Furthermore, resolution 1.1 also details the specific sentences that are encouraged to be implemented by all nations while respecting national sovereignty through the lack of international law. Lastly, this resolution addresses the lack of education that often lands victims in exploitative circumstances, through promoting and developing internationally coordinated and guided education programs, nations can combat the initial coercion that poses severe risks in human rights violations and human dignity. Educational programs should contain methods of distinguishing between real and false advertising and how to find the source and investigate the credibility of such labour opportunity ads. France strongly urges all nations to carefully consider their stance in relation to this resolution and determine whether this comprehensive solution and whole-of-root approach is suitable for each nation while being mindful of the voluntary funding that aims to be mainly contributed to by developed nations with the means to combat networks of human trafficking and smaller commitment contributions made by less developed nations to ensure fair distribution of resources and proportionate funding and aid. Thank you, this delegate yields the floor back to the chairs.

Honorable Chairs, Esteemed Delegates, resolution 1.2 must not pass without significant amendments. The delegation of France believes that while this resolution poses a strong basis for prevention, it is severely lacking in action regarding the trafficking victims after the fact. This delegate also strongly believes that the implementation of AI-driven detection systems is a crucial tool that must not be ignored or abused; however this resolution lacks the appropriate moderation mechanisms to combat the presence of e-recruitment advertisements. Furthermore, the resolution must further develop sentencing guidelines to specify the criminal punishments required. Lastly, the resolution lacks mechanisms for preventing re-trafficking and must address the complex nature of societal debts and personal desires that override rational thinking processes. While resolution 1.2 does provide some acknowledgement of the trafficking networks, it is still lacking in specific rules and actions taken to address the aftermath of trafficking and the people that enable networks to continue to operate sometimes even including national bodies who have been coerced into turning a blind eye. The delegation of France firmly believes that the lack of effective mechanisms is telling and is a sign that this resolution must not pass. However, resolution 1.1 is an extremely comprehensive form of resolution that addresses entire systems and thus France urges all nations to vote for the opposing resolution.

~~Methods of exploitation~~

Methods of communication like Telegram, Whatsapp, and SMS pose serious challenges to preventing exploitation especially across borders. By using encrypted systems and preventing the monitoring or detection of illicit conversations, traffickers across the globe can target vulnerable populations and persons without any interference or intervention. The delegation of France believes that establishing undercover accounts and automatically interacting with traffickers will help tackle the presence of e-recruitment through partnerships with the owners of such networks to flag certain activity as an international concern and report all of the traffickers personal data to the I-24/7 database. Furthermore, establishing algorithms to detect content on public social networks must be developed by international bodies to prevent AI-driven bias and ensure equally beneficial applications of the technology. France is committed to taking down the numerous deceitful advertisements that disproportionately impact and target minors, minorities, and desperate persons. The delegation of France seeks to collaborate with nations such as Mexico, the United States, the United Kingdom, and Belgium to develop a public and international directory of companies found to be using forced labour, otherwise known as the Brazilian concept of the “Lista Suja” (the Dirty List).

Trade route-based interventions

Honorable Chairs, Fellow Delegates, the trafficking routes across the world have become increasingly difficult to regulate with concerns regarding national security, international relations and partnerships, civilian travel restrictions, and more. The delegate of France believes that especially across the Schengen area, border stops must be established for at least 12 months to actively curb the presence of trafficking operations across Europe. The delegation of France also believes that in conjunction with digital monitoring of suspicious activities and transactions, regional police can target entire networks through “action days” utilizing JITs to take down criminals from their known transactional hubs. France firmly believes that this method of intervention will successfully inconvenience many traffickers and directly detain the persons involved while providing means to transport victims to rural safe houses where they may then make use of any national resources to aid in return to their home nation or provide information in exchange for legal status in the destination country. The delegation of France urges all nations to collaborate to develop a map of all main trafficking routes and set up stops within national borders to prevent premeditated jurisdictional shopping. Thank you, this delegate yields the floor back to the chairs.

~~Developing educational programs for highly vulnerable populations to prevent initial coercion~~

Honorable Chairs, Esteemed Delegates, across the globe the risk of exploitation varies from region to region and person to person. The delegation of France believes that in order to protect vulnerable populations from initial coercion, public education initiatives should be implemented to warn individuals of the forms of e-recruitment and deceitful advertisements through encrypted platforms. Through public education initiatives that promote messages of double checking credibility and recognizing typical trafficker landmarks in posts while also providing accessible resources to reduce circumstantial vulnerability such as addressing poverty or migrating due to tensions in their geographical location, citizens of vulnerable nations can feel supported in their circumstantial disadvantages. France believes that all persons have the right to believe in what they perceive but due to ill motives, governments must do all they can to ensure their citizens are well informed of the means used to deceive desperate individuals. The delegation of France must also mention that certain cultural factors can make coercion significantly easier with beliefs in juju and financial honorability; these cannot be combatted and must be treated as equally heinous methods of recruitment and coercion. Finally, establishing individual risk levels can aid nations in tending to populations and implementing initiatives and interventions to prevent the potential for human trafficking. Thank you, this delegate yields the floor back to the chairs.

~~Trafficked person protection~~

Honorable Chairs, Fellow Delegates, victims of trafficking are put in an impossible position that no nation can ignore, despite not being citizens of the destination country, France believes they are entitled to specific rights in accessing national resources and care during a period of reflection (of which must be internationally implemented and recognized). To ensure each nation upholds the value of human rights, the INTERPOL must develop a guide for implementing victim protection programs that focus on information exchange to serve as a means of receiving legal status in the country of destination. France also acknowledges the extremely fragile state that victims may be in which is why the delegate supports the provision of rural safe houses in common trafficking hubs such as France to prevent re-trafficking while also providing shelter, nutrition, and psychological support all of which must be funded by NGOs and the UN Voluntary Trust Fund for Victims of Trafficking or other international financial organizations that specifically support immigrants and victims of trafficking. The delegate of France believes that during the period of reflection which must be at least 2 months and ideally 3, the nation's criminal investigation bodies should provide victims with certified mental health professionals to gain information regarding their traffickers without causing harm to their mental state or physical safety. If during these three months they choose to share information regarding their traffickers with the mental health professional, they will be offered 2 pathways – gaining legal status or returning to their home nation. All of these standards will be implemented by France and mentioned as a guide to combatting trafficking for the members of INTERPOL. France believes that victims deserve to be protected like anyone else and must be treated with extra care due to the trauma experienced during the trafficking journey. Thank you, this delegate yields the floor back to the chairs.

Sexual exploitation and the legality of sex work

Honorable Chairs, Esteemed Delegates, the risk of sexual exploitation is not only enabled by traffickers themselves but sometimes even naive victims. Due to a severe lack of education worldwide stemming from the sense of taboo around the topic, victims of sexual exploitation and vulnerable individuals often end up in situations where without coercion they are incentivized to engage in sex work however due to the illicit and shamed nature in most countries means of sex work are often exploitative in design and border on and even violate human rights.
