The Question of Imposing Tariffs on Foreign States

Tariffs in the US have been utilized for numerous reasons including; attempts to boost the US economy, increased national security, reduced reliance on foreign nations, and most significantly, economic leverage. President Donald J. Trump has implemented extremely high tariffs in an attempt to refocus national investment into the US economy and while these tariffs pose promising leverage for international trade and national security, the taxes risk economic damage and the "burning of bridges" between the US and its trade partners.

Foreign nations such as China have previously hindered the American economy through the interdependence of the States on exports to and imports from the People's Republic of China, these disadvantages can and will be rectified through the President's tariffs. Despite the positive effects of tariffs, I will continuously warn the President of the risks of imposing permanent tariffs against all foreign nations, as these taxes will limit the USA's ability to negotiate trade deals and maintain a strong rapport with developed nations who are able to provide the United States with valuable goods and services. Furthermore the United States maintains frequent and varying trades with nations such as: Mexico, Canada, and the United Kingdom.

Notably, Mexico is in an odd position where immigration laws are aimed to prevent Mexicans and other Latin Americans from crossing the Gulf of America (Executive Order 14172), yet our nation is heavily reliant on the exports and imports provided by Central and Southern America. To rectify this dissonance, I suggest the continued investment into the American economy through the purchasing of local and verified goods, use of local technology, and expression of national pride in international discussion to encourage foreign aid into the US without reciprocal expectations. I believe this will all contribute to a better world where America is seen as the golden standard. An investment in America is an investment in the world, thus we must keep our trade as centralized as possible by emphasizing friend-shoring through trade with Canada and Mexico. I affirm that to ensure the congress upholds the belief that Americans must be prioritized – the implementation of reciprocal tariffs must only be implemented against nations with whom the nation wishes not to trade with to prevent the tax on American peoples, while maintaining as free a trade as possible for nations providing valuable goods.

Moreover, within a hundred and fifty days, the current legal basis for tariffs (Section 122 of the Trade Act of 1974) is set to expire, this cannot occur without planning. Thus, I strongly advocate for strategic reciprocality in the development of a new bill as supported by the previously mentioned Section 122 of the Trade Act of 1974. President Donald J. Trump has significantly influenced our economy for the better and we must acknowledge the mechanisms used to achieve this such as the implementation of foreign trade taxes, the limiting of migration, and strengthening of border security to prevent the degradation of the American economy by conflicting international interests, and the leeching off of social services by illegal aliens.

Finally, I aim to correct any discrepancies in the economic system through strategic tariffs and the development of an extra judiciary body (the Trade Masters) who are responsible for the regulation of economic impacts by tracking the GDP, per capita income, import and export revenue, and innovation profit. I affirm the use of tariffs for the security of our national economy. Across all states, members of the congress must aim to reduce the implications of tariffs on the state population, being mindful of supermarket price increases, a lack of foreign products, or a spike in demand for a certain product. I strongly believe that through the removal of blanket tariffs and implementation of calculated taxes, America will maintain the status of the strongest economy in the world and can afford to continue prospects of betterment for the nation and world. Lastly, I do not condone the implementation of state-based economic laws as they cause jurisdictional shopping, inequality, forced migration, and overall lack of standardization all contributing to a failed economic system. Through the Trade Masters, all states can be reassured that their population is benefiting from the economic implications of the tariffs and taxes against unfriendly nations.

The Question of Regulating Legal Immigration

As America holds its standing as the best country in the world, many individuals are eager to share this privilege of the American dream, but I strongly believe that the distinction must be made between the rights and privileges of immigrants and illegal aliens in the United States of America. Gaining legal status is not a right but a privilege that must be treated with prestige. The extensive processes of which must be undertaken to receive legal status in our beautiful country is an American foundation that cannot be erased. While immigrants are contributing to the American economy, the drawbacks of increased criminality and social service fraud are factors that must be taken into account when considering the possible reformation of legal pathways to immigration status. The United States of America must be protected from the citizens of foreign nations who aim to take advantage of the welcoming nature of the United States.

Over the previous presidencies, various polarizing decisions regarding immigration have been made, particularly in respect to the Latin American population not only in Central and Southern America but also within the States themselves as monitoring must be carried out to ensure America is freed of unlawfully present individuals aiming to bypass constitutional values and benefit from social services. The current President's limits on the provision of food aid to immigrants is a strategic effort to ensure American immigrants are required to support themselves. The provision of $45 billion USD allocated to the detention of illegal immigrants has been a successful approach to mitigating the toll taken on America by dependent foreign individuals, and despite claims of mistreatment in detention facilities, I believe that all individuals illegally entering America do not deserve the right to the American dream and must be removed by all means necessary. Furthermore, I thoroughly value the rule of law in America and believe that all aspects of the US Constitution must be upheld. When foreign citizens pose risks to the Constitution, specifically Article II, Section 3 – the “Take Care” clause which is violated when amnesty rules such as DACA are implemented by the President. I firmly believe that the selection of applicability cannot be done without regressing to a Monarchy-based government where the major influencers are able to exempt individuals and groups from national and even constitutional laws. Moreover, this enables chain-migration of which is the largest risk of allowing immigrants into a nation's borders which rapidly expands the number of “legal” immigrants and will undoubtedly cause enumeration which causes distortion creating more congressional seats for states with an influx in legal and illegal immigrants who must not be at the center of the decisions regarding the American people.

As the Senator of Texas, my concerns are centered around the Texan people and their local businesses, the Texan job market, and economic growth within Texas. Texas is made up of a diverse population with an even split between white (39.92%) and hispanic (39.92%) peoples (World Population Review). As the second largest state in America, I highly value the basic and non-invasive monitoring of persons to provide optimal living conditions for the American people. I aim to prioritize American citizens in job markets, judiciary procedures, and loan opportunities without excluding legal immigrants. I believe immigrants who have waited their turn, and showed viable potential for American benefit through labour or intelligence – like my father, Rafael Cruz – should be treated as equals to the American-born citizens such as myself.

I, Ted Cruz, immediately urge all states to collect together to combat the violations in Constitutional rulings through banning amnesty and revoking social services for legal immigrants who in order to be beneficial to the United States must be self sustained and may not rely on government aid. Finally, to prevent enormous monetary values from being allocated without thorough examination and trend-based predictions, I urge the congress to form a bill that sets a maximum amount of aid allowed for given sectors of the nation, while also providing procedures to allow the circumstantial allowances of extraordinary aid if determined to be absolutely critical to national security or stability. I stand ready to address this multifaceted issue with respect to all legal individuals and existing legislation.

The Question of Providing Military Aid to Foreign States

The United States of America remains one of the most powerful armies in the world and is frequently in support of ending international conflicts through the sustained support of one or more collaborating nations. In recent years, the regional conflict between Israel and their surrounding nations has called for American aid which we have continued to proudly supply through financial contributions to Israel's military and the provision of war weapons to help empower Israel's Qualitative Military Edge (QME) to end this seemingly endless conflict. I believe that our strongest allies are Israel and Taiwan and I support all prospects of supporting them no matter what. President Donald J. Trump has shown increasing support for Israel through conversations with Israel's prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu. I believe that military aid for foreign nations can be extremely empowering but can also be the cause for catastrophic consequences and thus must be wisely and widely considered before establishing and providing the official material or financial support. Most importantly, international relations must not have a detrimental effect on American citizens and must not be a topic of debate or conflict amongst citizens. The provision of military aid is a government-level decision and is made with regards to all possible outcomes thus is not subject to civilian input or outrage.

Recently, the strikes from and to Iran have increased in their frequency and damage with a CNN World article detailing the death of the Iranian Supreme Leader indicating the possible trigger of a regime change within the Islamic Republic of Iran however current temporary officials have been elected during this period of nationwide mourning. Despite the disagreements between The US President and the President of Iran, I believe that Donald Trump is doing all he can to protect the world from unruly leaders like that of Iran, through the support of Israel's missile strikes against Tehran. The United States must be protected from nuclear weapons hence, our President, Donald J. Trump has yet again proven himself to be the best President to date with his passion for American safety and international relations with national sovereignty. Trump is also extremely intelligent in his support of Taiwan against China and is ensuring no unnecessary deaths or harm is caused due to the territorial tensions.

As the Texan Senator, I strongly support the prospects of continued strikes against Tehran's horrifying nuclear scene and will not rest easy until the day that nuclear weapons are no longer an Iranian privilege. I urge all states to come together and provide the funding and military support necessary to eliminate this long-lasting threat to global security. In order to do this without violence, the United States and Israel must develop maximum pressure and continued Israeli military support to prevent the governmental cover-ups and harmful secrets that could be leading the region into despair. The Senator of Texas strongly believes that Israel is doing the lord's work in respect to ridding the world of irresponsible leaders who allow such heinous projects to be conducted. I am committed to addressing this with honor and respect to Israel and with regards to the deaths of innocent children. Furthermore, I stand with Taiwan in its attacks against China and am strongly encouraging all states to aid Taiwan's military in protecting themselves from Chinese takeover. Through the support of these two loyal and respectable nations, our world can live in peace with national security intact and international partnerships thriving. I believe in detaching ourselves from China and supporting Taiwan in gaining military leverage to prevent unjust treatment of Taiwanese citizens on their land. I firmly believe that our congress is key to maintaining peace between these nations.
